@Occ4LifeLtd When people put education out there or host an advocacy event - show up & listen. When at an Occupational Therapy event with inaccessibility issues, let the organizers know what your concerns are about inaccessibility & that you want disabled practitioners to attend #OTalk

@Occ4LifeLtd Like Canada is starting w/land acknowledgements (which in opinion of a settler, are not enough in reconciling current & historical issues), could call for acknowledging contributions to ableism when choosing not to make space/opp more accessible/inclusive & learn to adapt #OTalk

beyond COVID @beyondcovid

@Occ4LifeLtd And when say land acknowledgements (and ableism acknowledgements) are not enough- if they are not connected with further learning and allied action for change, it's just repeatedly saying 'We're sorry we oppressed you. Thanks for letting us continue to oppress you' #OTalk

@Occ4LifeLtd #OTalk I often recommend colleagues read Dr Clare Taylors Casson lecture from 2007 about diversity in the profession. So really relevant today, and thought provoking, so could be good for a journal club, for starting the conversation <https://t.co/pY98zn41GT>

This is exactly the kind of aid I need. I have problems with all of my joints, but losing my grip and dexterity is among the most difficult disability to cope with, because I write and I'm also an artist. Also can't get lids off jars, hold a pen, ect
